CCP's products

Many online games create multiple instances of their games, or shards

In such games, players can not interact across shards, seriously limiting the growth of social networks

This also limits the size of what these social networks can build collectively

In a single sandbox there is no limit to the size of the social networks nor the size of what they can build

EVE Online: Incarna

EVE Online: Incarna

Posted - 2011.03.07 16:43:00 - [1]

At the December Summit in Iceland, CCP presented the Incarna expansion to the current CSM. At this meeting the CSM urged CCP in the strongest possible terms to step up with the messaging efforts for the expansion as we felt that expectation management would be critical to its success at launch. We are pleased to see that CCP has begun to release initial information about Incarna.

However, given how crucial Incarna is to the future of EVE and CCP, the CSM feels compelled to make public some significant concerns we have raised that have not yet been addressed by CCP. We wish to stress, in the strongest possible way, that we do not do this in order to be inflammatory. Rather, the success or failure of Incarna is such an important issue that, in good conscience, we cannot remain silent.

EVE Online: Incarna

Our first and most crucial concern is that there is little evidence so far of a roadmap for this feature. We are extremely concerned that development of Incarna, the most significant addition to EVE since Beta, is being done in an ad-hoc, on-the-fly manner.

Second, we wish to re-iterate our unanimous objection to the forced integration of Incarna into the general Eve experience, and that we strongly urge CCP to ensure that any new systems will not adversely affect the performance of the EVE client.

Third, regarding metrics, we feel that forced integration will not provide a true picture of the usefulness of the features, while at the same time, these metrics will be used to justify Incarna. As in any area of business, using flawed metrics to justify resource allocations can only lead to poor decisions.

Fourth, while we agree that CCP's decision to stage the release of Incarna in small chunks is a wise one, we feel that it is very important for CCP to expand their messaging and provide a clear and detailed vision of the future iteration and potential of Incarna, so that players who are highly invested in the current core gameplay of EVE will be able to better judge the value they will be receiving for the large amount of time and effort being invested in Incarna by CCP.

EVE Online: Incarna

The CSM would like to reiterate that we are not opposed to the development of Incarna; rather we are primarily concerned about the apparent lack of significant planning for a feature CCP properly regards as crucial to the future of the company, and the game we love so much.

We want to see Incarna fully fleshed-out. How that is done and how the evolution of Incarna is messaged will be key challenges for CCP over the next several expansions. We hope that CCP will view these expressions of concern as useful feedback that will be helpful in properly justifying and measuring the resources being devoted to Incarna.

Most Sincerely,

Members of the Fifth Council of Stellar Management

My advice?

- It is not enough to watch what your customers do (through data)
- You have to listen to them as well (through data)
- And you have to talk to them
- If you make a booboo;
 - Be honest about it
 - Fix it
 - Don't let it happen again

My advice?
