

Everybody Lies: Survivorship Bias

Iskander Khabibrakhmanov

We live in the World of Success

- Athletes
- Actors
- Businessmen

Success Stories Everywhere

- Come from authorities
- Easy to sell and use
- Nobody wants to learn from losers

Survivorship Bias

Learn from those who failed

World War II Bombers

World War II Bombers

Sources of Experience

- F2P FPS
- Rental business-model

Operating F2P in Early Stages

- Main goal is retention
- Moderate product quality
- Frequent updates
- Players feedback is crucial

Launching Shadow Company in Russia

- Launched Shadow Company and faced low retention
- Asked customers for their feedback
- Got complaints about skills system
- Improved skills system
- Nothing changed

LESS THAN 10% played on 7th day

We asked the wrong
people

Facebook Fallacy

95%

interviewees responded that they somehow like the product

< 10%

players still played the game more than 7 days after registration

game

users

you

dissatisfied users

Changes & Tweaks

Changes & tweaks are past dependent.

Dynamics of User Base

The past has time-limited effect on user base.

Price Increase in Shadow Company

Doubled the price

...looked at new customers

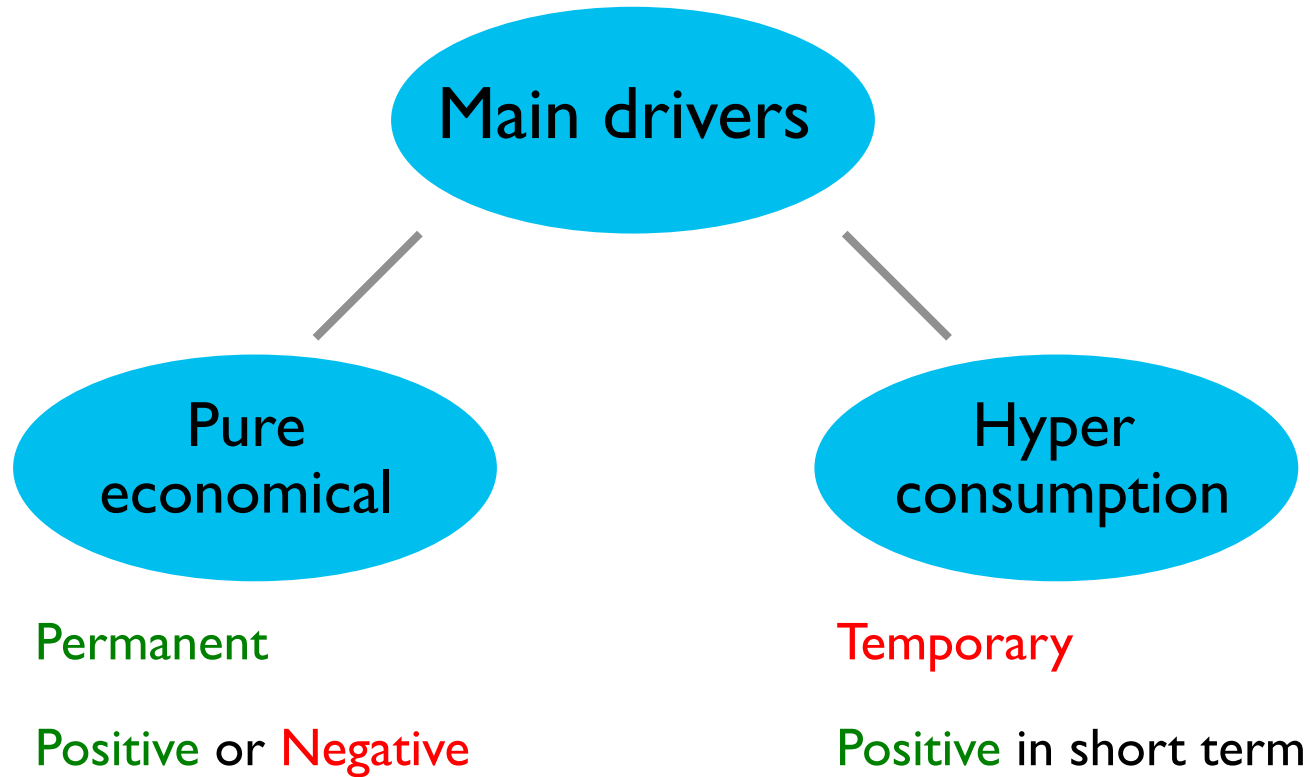

Almost revert the change...

Outcome

Discounts

Revenue Dynamics

or

How to Predict the Outcome

Seek
for balance

Wrap-up

- Learn from those who failed
- Extending your audience means satisfying dissatisfied
- It is hard to return from flight without pilot or engine
- Looking at new users separately may help in different way (not being tricked and predict outcomes of events)
- However, balance is important